Wales performs worse than any other part of the UK for installed renewable energy capacity. How did this resource-rich country - which once led the way for both onshore and offshore wind - become the laggard? And what does the future hold for energy in Wales more generally?

David Clubb, Director of RenewableUK, will talk about energy in the UK and in Wales, and will highlight some developments which mean our future is likely to be brighter than our past.

If you are a student or a young professional in the energy industry do not hesitate to attend this event. All together can create a strong network to share knowledge and good practices in South Wales.
